

N.B.: The published version of my dissertation, without all the distracting and laughable tableaugh that were in the filed version, may be found elsewhere. Here, I just provide the acknowledgments. These were wonderful times for me. UCLA was fantastic.

Acknowledgments

My mother loves telling the story of how, in 1986, soon after I returned to Shanghai, fresh from hitch-hiking through the mountains of Guizhou and Yunnan, she was standing in the driveway one day talking with Barry and Donca, listening to them tell her how if I like Chinese and the minority regions so much, I should maybe study linguistics, and they mentioned UCLA in particular as a department that might suit my interests. "Maybe you two want to study that crazy stuff, but why on earth do you think Danny would want to?" she thought to herself behind her polite smile...

...Donca Steriade is not only a great linguist and a great teacher. Truly, she is a great person. Throughout my graduate career, Donca has always been there to support and encourage me both academically and personally, to demand my best work and never let me get away with my natural laziness, and to constantly remind me that she's not my mother. She will always be my teacher.

Bruce Hayes' unparalleled intelligence, his oftentimes startling enthusiasm, his always having my best interests in mind, and his faith in my ability, are gratefully acknowledged.

Pat Keating and Peter Ladefoged, in two quite distinct but equally important ways, have proven more and more invaluable (semantic anomaly intended) as my graduate career progressed from insular formalist to enlightened functionalist.

Henning Andersen and Donka Minkova have both shared their unique abilities and areas of expertise with me, and I am very grateful for their support throughout this project.

I have benefited greatly from many meetings, both arranged and impromptu, with Ian Maddieson, my unofficial seventh committee member. I would also like to thank Jody Kreiman at the UCLA voice lab, for being so patient with my naive questions and my technical inexpertise, and Judi Lynn Anderson of the SIL, Oaxaca branch, for her assistance, and for her years of Chinantec fieldwork. Thanks also to Paul Kirk for his generous help with the Mazatec.

UCLA Linguistics is really like a family to me. My years here have been among the most satisfying--intellectually, emotionally, spiritually--in my life. My great friend Jongho Jun was always there for me in every way; Abby Kaun and I have at times been virtually inseparable. I could not ask for better friends. Edward Flemming deserves special mention for talking way over my head so regularly, and for his sincere friendship. Dani Byrd and Richard Wright, also, are true friends.

Filippo Beghelli, Rod Casali, Bonnie Chiu, Claire Chyi, Sean Fulop, Chris Golston, Matt Gordon, Rob Hagiwara, Chai-Shune Hsu, Robert Kirchner, Heather Morrison, Keith Johnson, Karn King, Murat Kural, Peggy MacEachern, Jonathan Mead, Benjamin Munson, Nakamura

Akira, Michael Nkemnji, Brian Potter, Bonnie Sands, Tetsuya Sano, Aaron Shryock, Kim Thomas, and many others, thank you!

Nina Hyams, Sun Ah Jun, Hilda Koopman, Anoop Mahajan, Pam Munro, Tim Stowell, Russ Schuh, Dominique Sportiche, Anna Szabolcsi, and others, thank you! And a special thank you to Susie Curtiss for being the incredible person she is.

John Bulger and Anna Meyer, thank you for the friendship and the schmoozing, and for scraping me off the ceiling so many times when I just couldn't take the paperwork anymore.

Thanks to the Department of Linguistics, the Graduate Division, and the President's office, for six years of books, music, and beer.

Thanks to Jerry Packard, Alan Prince, Barry Schein, Moira Yip, and Edgar Zurif, who guided me to UCLA in the first place.

And Zhang Jie, thank you for bringing everything full circle. You are truly harifon me ?arbaʕat habanim; ti\ ji\ [ʕoŋʌ ɕjaʊ] xaɪʌ.